ASSET FORFEITURE, RECOVERY AND MANAGEMENT GUIDELINES

(Issued under Sections 18(1) and 24(2) of the National Prosecutions Service Act, Cap. 430)

May, 2023

PREFACE

The United Republic of Tanzania is committed to the global fight against crime in order to ensure that criminals cannot seek safe heaven for their ill-gotten wealth. Therefore, being part of the international community, Tanzania has put in place legal and institutional framework for forfeiture and recovery of tainted properties in terms of the general principle that crime does not pay. The process of forfeiture and recovery involves identification, tracing, preservation, management, confiscation, enforcement and disposal of tainted properties.

Tanzania, like many other countries has taken initiatives through international cooperation and existing legal and institutional framework to demonstrate that asset recovery is possible. However, there are challenges in identification, tracing, preservation, management, confiscation and disposal of tainted properties which prompted the need for developing these Guidelines

It is my hope that these Guidelines will prove useful for investigators, prosecutors and other relevant stakeholders. I therefore, look forward to using the guidelines to provide technical assistance, build consistency and achieve immediate outcome in handling cases with asset potentiality across the country.

PART I

1.0 INTRODUCTION

1.1 Mandate, Objectives and Rationale

The United Nations Convention Against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances, 1988 (Vienna Convention), The United Nations Convention Against Transnational Organised Crime, 2000 (UNTOC) and United Nations Convention Against Corruption, 2003 (UNCAC) require member states to put in place confiscation measures in combating crimes. Tanzania being a signatory to these International Conventions has enacted several confiscation laws to ensure that all tainted properties are recovered.

Article 59B of the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania, Cap 2, provides for the appointment of the DPP and vests him with powers to initiate, prosecute and supervise all criminal prosecutions in the country. In line with the powers vested to the DPP under the Constitution, Sections 9, 16 and 24 of NPSA, mandate the DPP to prosecute and supervise all criminal prosecutions as well as to co-ordinate all criminal investigations in the country.

Section 12 of the NPSA, mandates the DPP to take any further proceedings or steps that may be required to recover the amount payable to the Government or enforce an order forfeiting the property to the Government or any other order resulting from proceedings conducted by NPS under any other law.

Notwithstanding the enactment of confiscation laws, there have been challenges in identification, tracing, preservation, management, confiscation and disposal of tainted properties. Currently there are no Guidelines in place to guide prosecutors and investigators for better implementation of forfeiture, recovery and management of tainted properties.
